Component title or description at the Receiving Institution	Sustainable Industrialised Housing: The Way Forward for Implementing Collaborative Housing
Component Code	2024-1-PT01-KA131-HED-000223205-2
Short description of the virtual component	This BIP explores the potential of industrialised housing as a viable solution for implementing collaborative housing models, emphasising how modular construction techniques can streamline housing development by reducing costs and timelines, while simultaneously enhancing efficiency and sustainability. In parallel, digitalisation is identified as the most transformative factor for both the construction sector and society at large. It offers new opportunities for the development of more efficient management of resources, and a significant reduction in carbon emissions. By combining industrialised construction methods with collaborative housing principles, the study proposes an innovative approach to addressing the housing crisis in urban areas. It underscores the importance of integrating sustainable building practices, fostering community cohesion, and promoting affordability. The main goal is to present industrialised housing not only as a means of increasing housing supply but also as a tool for creating inclusive, community-oriented living environments. Ultimately, the BIP argues that this combination offers a pathway to more resilient and adaptable urban development, better equipped to meet the challenges of modern housing demands. The five-day on-site course also analyses the social and economic benefits of collaborative housing, where residents actively participate in the planning and management of their living spaces.
